Sunday, July 24: 1:00pm – 7:00pm | Mon – Fri, July 25 – July 29: 6:00pm – 10:30pm | Saturday, July 30: 9:00am - 5:00pm

BUS-345-FX Business, Professional, and Consumer Negotiation – Kerry Fina
In seven days you will build skills necessary to end a war, merge a company, or get a good price on your new home. It's all about negotiation - the art, love, and labor of human agreement. In this class, you will practice and hone those skills that will help you lead discussions that ultimately produce progressive outcomes for all parties involved. It's intense, it's engaging, it's fun - it's Business 345 and it's one-week only this January! This course fulfills one requirement for Business majors with a Human Resource Management or General Business emphasis. It is required for Paralegal Studies majors and fulfills one Liberal Learning requirement for everyone EXCEPT Business majors.

BUS-365-FX Ethics in a Business Environment – Janet Dodson
Simply put, ethics involves learning what is right or wrong, and then doing the right thing -- but "the right thing" in business is not nearly as straightforward as that. Most ethical dilemmas in the workplace are not simply a matter of "Should Bob steal from Jack?" or "Should Jack lie to his boss?" In the daily scramble to get ahead, earn a profit, and outwit competitors, some people don’ t play by the rules. Media attention and popular writings seem to always detail the misdeeds, but there are many more companies that behave! It is important to consider both the positive business models for their value as well as review the issues of controversy as ways to explore ethical issues. What is corporate ethical decision-making and behavior? How do others emulate it? Classic cases will be explored and expect lively discussion and class interaction on a variety of in-class ethical case studies. This course is required for Accounting, Business, and Communication majors. It fulfills one Liberal Learning requirement for everyone except Business majors.

CMS-112-FX Small Group Communication – Gary Morse
The tendency to join with others in groups is perhaps the most important single characteristic of humans, and the groups we join leave a lasting influence on our lives. It is through working with others that we seek to solve the problems of family, work, and society. In this course we will explore such topics as stages of group development, group leadership, communication in groups, team building, the mysteries of group effectiveness, and, on the flip side, the horrors of dysfunctional groups. The seminar format will allow us to experience everything we are learning as we work toward becoming a fully functional work group. This great course is a requirement for Human Relations and Organizational Communication majors and fulfills the Doane Plan Oral Communication requirement.

CMS-471-FX Special Issues in Leadership Communication – Juli Burney
This course was developed specifically to deal with communication issues that are prevalent in today’s workplace. It will focus on listening skills, communicating to encourage listening, emotional intelligence effects on communication, generational influences, and gender influences. It will fulfill one Liberal Learning requirement for everyone EXCEPT Organizational Communication majors.

ECO 328-FX Exploring Economics Through Popular Film – Suzy Carter
Economics goes to the movies. Our goal is to expose students to economic theories not covered in principle courses through discussion of popular films. Students will explore some of the ideas of capitalism, Marxism, environmental economics, international economics, game theory and more. Each class showcases a feature film. Titles such as The Matrix, Reds, Other People’s Money, A Beautiful Mind, Erin Brockovich and Proof of Life will be our text as we explore various aspects of economic theory. Bring your favorite movie food and see these and other great movies in a new light. In addition to a great learning experience, you may apply the 3-credits earned for this course to the Liberal Learning category of the Doane Plan if you entered prior to August 2014.

ENG-237-FX W-Introduction to Fiction – Deb Sharp
This course introduces students to the wonderful world of literature and the fascinating lives of fiction writers. Our learning will be experienced through a logical sequence. The actual reading of the work will be the obvious beginning. Then, the purpose and nature of the fiction will be analyzed by questions of craft, the so-called elements of fiction. Finally, each author’s life will also be explored to help foster ways of seeing the works within their temporal and cultural contexts. The reading of the fiction will ultimately give us insight into the way we understand and experience our own lives. This course fulfills the Doane Plan Literature requirement.

GRD 120-FX Beginning Web Design – Chris Hadfield
Would you like to design eye-popping Web pages? If you have a small business, especially a home-based business, your Web page is your most important business address, and your Web site is the quickest way to customers to find you. But businesses aren’t the only ones publishing on the Web. Many individuals are learning the benefits and satisfaction of Internet publishing. Personal homepages contain everything from soup to nuts - literally! Many people use their Web site to swap and share family recipes. They can also share knowledge in various areas of expertise, build family trees, share photos, and find lost friends and relatives. Sometimes people use personal Web sites to share tidbits of information, jokes, and other cool Web sites they find. ADDED BONUS: You will earn 3 elective credits when you take this course!!! The course also prepares Graphic Design majors for Graphic Design II, which will involve more advanced Web page design.

HIS 314-FX History of Vietnam and the 60’s – Mark Orsag
At the beginning of the 1960s, America seemed to be on the edge of a golden age. On January 20, 1961, the handsome and charismatic John F. Kennedy ushered in a presidency that many felt was the equivalent of Camelot. With unequaled confidence and pride, Kennedy inspired the American people to “Ask not what your country can do for you, but what you can do for your country.” Kennedy’s and then Johnson’s faith that the government possessed big answers to big problems set the tone for the rest of the decade and for decades to come. Join us for an exciting exploration of this extraordinary time in our history that saw the assassination of a president, a successful struggle for civil rights, the rise of the feminist movement, a war that divided a nation, massive civil disobedience, and the beginning of The Great Society. For the Undergraduate Core, this course fulfills the requirement for Global and Cultural Contexts. For students who entered prior to August 2014, this course fulfills the Doane Plan Intercultural/Multicultural requirement. If not used to fulfill that requirement, can be used to fulfill one Liberal Learning requirement.

PSY 371-FX Grief and Bereavement Counseling – Brenda Kastens
For all of us there are or will be times when we must cope with the loss of a loved one or deal with major life changes that trigger feelings of grief. Grief counseling is a form of therapy that focuses on someone’s intense feelings of loss. It can be valuable after a loved one dies, or during and after the break up of a marriage, the loss of a job, the diagnosis of a fatal illness, or a myriad of other reasons. We will explore our intense feelings about the difficult issues associated with grief and identifies strategies and resources for managing those issues. This course fulfills one Doane Plan Liberal Learning requirement for everyone.

PSY 471-FX The Story of Mental Illness Told Through Film – Gina Larson
Nothing conveys information or evokes emotion quite as clearly as our visual sense. Filmmakers capture the richness of this visual sense, combine it with auditory stimuli, and create the ultimate waking dream experience: the movie. Film has become such an integral part of our culture that it seems to be the mirror in which we see ourselves reflected every day (Wedding & Boyd, p 9). The introduction of film into the study of psychology allows us the opportunity of exploring complexities of behavior, emotion, and interpersonal relationships in persons struggling with a variety of mental health issues. This course will fulfill one Liberal Learning requirement for everyone.
